The American Psychiatric Association in joint sponsorship with the Indiana Psychiatric Society invites you to participate in this 2013 event held in conjunction with the 164th Indiana State Medical Association's Annual Convention.

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

The goal of the APA was to develop a scientifically-based manual of psychiatric diagnosis useful for clinicians in evaluating psychiatric patients. This is now known as the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). APA's interest in developing DSM dates back to the organization's inception in 1844, when one of its original missions was to gather statistics on the prevalence of mental illness. In the two decades since the publication of DSM-IV, psychiatry has witnessed a wealth of new studies on epidemiology, neurobiology, psychopathology, and treatment of various mental illnesses. These scientific developments necessitated that APA make modifications in the diagnostic categories and criteria.

The APA's extensive development process of the fifth edition of the DSM was unveiled with the release of the DSM-5 in May 2013. The release of the manual requires that psychiatrists become familiar with DSM-5, with an understanding of the changes from DSM-IV, and the scientific reasons for those changes.

This event, accredited for 5.5 AMA PRA Category 1 Credits, will highlight the many changes and the rationale behind them explained, including the reorganization of the chapters (the "metastructure"), the creation of new diagnoses and categories, the consolidation of some diagnoses, and the deletion of others. The demise of the multi-axial diagnosis will be reviewed. The changes include an emphasis on dimensional ratings, gender, and cultural issues. Controversies accompanying the DSM-5 will be explored. Following the event, attendees will be ready to begin using DSM-5 in clinical practice, research settings, and for administrative purposes.

This symposium will be conducted using slides and handouts developed by the editors of DSM-5 and made available only to APA-trained psychiatrists who have agreed to serve as the speakers in their respective states.
